History of the Hotel de Londres

- 1884 Hotel de Londres was opened by Anton and Melanie Arnold. The name is a nod to the English mountaineers who visited Valais, and also a tribute by Anton Arnold to his time in the hotel industry in London.
- 1905 For over a hundred years, Hotel de Londres has been a witness to the Brig markets. Even today, they are held in front of the hotel, attracting people from the region and beyond.
- 1906 The completion of the Simplon Tunnel opened a new, attractive route into Valais, fundamentally changing tourism. In the same year, the last stagecoach stopped in Brig - right in front of Hotel de Londres.
- 1910 Aviation pioneer Géo Chávez undertook the first flight over the Alps from Brig. A fountain opposite Hotel de Londres commemorates this historic feat.
- 1932 Otto Arnold, son of Anton, and his wife Hilda, took over Hotel de Londres. The family photo with son Paul was taken on the hotel terrace.
- 1935 The Brigerbad thermal springs, already appreciated by the Romans, were progressively developed and continue to be frequented by guests of Hotel de Londres to this day.
- 1961 The Arnold family sold Hotel de Londres, which changed hands several times over the ensuing years.
- 2013 Hotel de Londres was acquired by the Roten family.
- 2015 After comprehensive renovations that respected its 130-year history, Hotel de Londres was reopened as a boutique hotel.
- 2023 After over 70 years of service, our elevator was retired. We took this opportunity to enhance guest comfort with improved lighting, textures, and furnishings in the lobby, seminar room, and lounge.
- 2024 Installation of air conditioning throughout the entire hotel.
